

An increase in funds to regional dance companies in 1973 was designed to help them work in ways rarely possible for a major company and to provide a link with younger audiences often absent from ballet performances. Several works were added to repertoires in 1975/76. The Dance Company (N.S.W.) produced two Tetley pieces, Pierrot Lunaire and Circles as well as a commissioned work by Remy Charlip entitled Woolloomooloo Cuddle and several pieces by members of the company. Ballet Victoria's Stars End (Jonathon Taylor) and Concerto Grosso (Charles Czarny) were well received. The Queensland Ballet Company under its new artistic director, Harry Haythorne (formerly of Scottish Ballet), employed Walter Gore to produce a three-act version of Cinderella as well as commissioning works by the Australian choreographer Graeme Murphy and bringing Australian Don Asker back from the Netherlands to create a new work. The Western Australian Ballet worked energetically to attract a younger audience and staged a rock spectacular Everyday Saturday for the Perth Festival.

The two folk-character companies have become a valuable addition to the pattern of Australian dance. Kolobok Dance Company (Victoria) has progressed primarily as a performing group, while Dance Concert (N.S.W.) has acted as a resource centre and as an educator by working closely with ethnic communities and school teachers to create a greater awareness of dance.

Assistance also has been given to a large number of amateur and semi-professional organisations to stage productions and work with professional choreographers. Organisations which have benefited include the Queensland Modern and Contemporary Dance Company, the Ballet Theatre (Queensland) and the North Queensland Ballet and Dance Society.

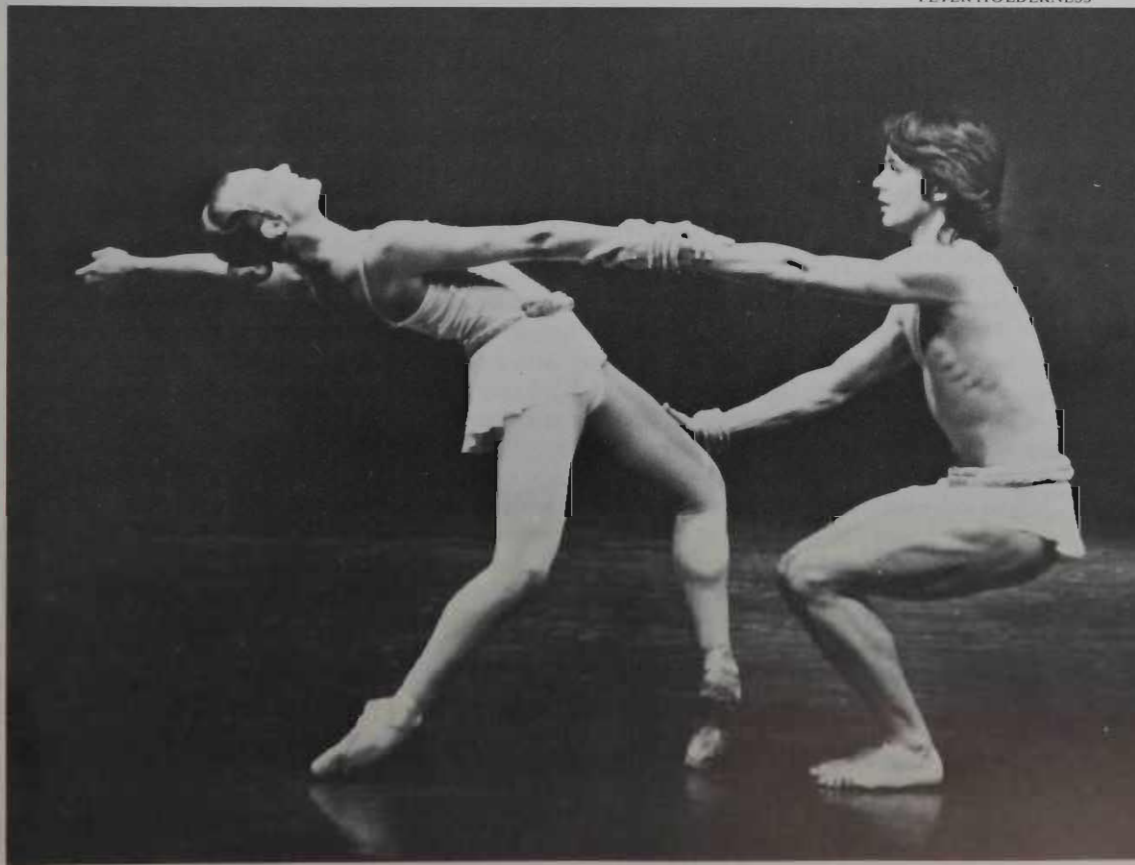

Besides professional training at the Australian Ballet School, Ballet Victoria School and the Graduate College of Dance (Western Australia), assistance has been given to male dance trainees to work with professional companies. The North-West Victorian Ballet Guild has developed a scheme to provide expert teaching for children in remote areas. Four professional teachers whose salaries are supplemented by a Board grant now work in 14 centres.

The Board has met some of the music costs in dance by providing funds for six dancers to work with A-Z Music in a concert at the Sydney Opera House Recording Hall, and in the purchase of a John Cage score for choreographer, Jacqui Carroll. A grant to the Australian Opera to provide the ballets for its productions of Aida and Jenufa enabled it to engage the Dance Company (N.S.W.)

Choreographers Nanette Hassall and Russell Dumas received living allowances to cover the six months they worked on choreographic processes. A three-week seminar at the University of New England enabled potential choreographers to develop ideas and gave critics from the media an opportunity to attend lectures and discussions and watch works in progress. An impressive faculty consisted of Norman Morrice (former Director, Ballet Rambert), Peter Brinson (Director, Gulbenkian Foundation) and Martha Hill (Head of Dance Department, Juilliard School, New York).

Two puppet companies — the Marionette Theatre of Australia and the Tasmanian Puppet Theatre — have continued to receive general assistance. The Marionette Theatre appointed Richard Bradshaw as artistic director and re-formed the company into a smaller unit. The Tasmanian Puppet Theatre acquired an old three-storey warehouse in Salamanca Place, Hobart, which is being developed to include a theatre, workshop, offices and studios. The company also commissioned Takeshi Hoshino, Art Director of PUK, the Japanese National Puppet Theatre in Tokyo, to write, produce and direct a traditional Japanese-style production — the first time a Japanese puppet director had worked with an Australian company.

With co-ordinating assistance by the Board, the Council's International Committee and the Australian Elizabethan Theatre Trust brought the Coad Canada Puppets to Australia for performances in all States except Western Australia in September–October 1975. They also gave workshop performances for teachers and, at the Marionette Theatre in Sydney, conducted a workshop for experienced puppeteers from all States. The Board has initiated a two-year puppetry training scheme. Three trainees began their first year in 1975. The services of Beverley Campbell-Jackson were secured as a technical adviser to puppetry throughout Australia.

The spread of the Board's funds is more adequately illustrated in the grants list published in this report. Theatre arts in Australia are advancing significantly and audiences are growing. By mid-1976, however, a shortage of funds threatened to halt progress.

VISUAL ARTS:

Refining the Quality

The effect of inflation on some of the Board's programs, especially those involving international exhibitions and visitors, was fortunately offset by complementary support from Commonwealth Government Departments, State Government institutions, the British Council, private and commercial sponsors, and by the introduction of modest admission charges to exhibitions.

The Board maintained a relatively high level of support for professional artists, although programs aimed at increasing community understanding and involvement in visual arts were reduced. Assistance to art groups, societies and workshops, grants for films, publications and exhibitions were areas in which the Board could not sustain the initiatives it had previously supported.

Visitors to the Adelaide Festival of Arts in March 1976 saw two major international exhibitions especially mounted for Australian tours: The Sculpture of Thailand, negotiated and organised by the Board Chairman and its staff and Fernand Leger, selected by Alicia Legg, Associate Curator, Painting and Sculpture at the Museum of Modern Art, New York, mounted by the International Program of that Museum and co-sponsored by Caltex Oil (Australia) Pty Limited; and a series of performances by an internationally acclaimed avant-garde duo, cellist Charlotte Moorman and video artist Nam June Paik, sponsored by John Kaldor and assisted by the Board.

The three years of its existence have seen considerable changes in the composition and operations of the Board. Members have brought diverse views, experience and skills to discussions at meetings and to problems concerning specific projects. The size of the Board has been reduced during this time and further reductions are proposed. As administrative economies were imposed in 1975 fewer meetings were possible, and yet at the same time demands on the Board, in the grant program and in its advisory role, increased considerably.

Working as a team with Board members, drawing on the advice and assistance of consultants, assessment panels, art institutions and associations, and stimulating patronage beyond the immediate resources of the Board, the small professional staff has managed to handle a substantial growth in energy and activity.

In 1975/76 the Board again ensured that about half its budget was set aside for direct assistance grants, for grants to institutions to commission or purchase works, or to provide stipends for artists-in-residence. On the recommendations of three regional panels appointed to assess the 1975 grant applications, $188 057 was distributed among 81 artists in the three categories of grants: Standard (12 month fellowship), Overseas Travel and Special Projects.

To diversify the modes of assistance available to artists and involve a range of people in making judgments, the Board set aside a limited proportion of its funds for direct and indirect assistance to the Art Purchase Program introduced as a pilot project early in 1976. Under this program a number of selectors recommend the purchase of works by those artists who merit attention and are in need of support. The selectors were Lou Klepac and Guy Grey-Smith (W.A.), Noel Hutchison and Carl Andrew (Tasmania) and Betty Churcher and Ian Still (Queensland). It is envisaged that most purchases will be of work by young, emerging artists. The Art Purchase Program will be evaluated by the Board at the end of the first year of operation.

Educational institutions with Board assistance appointed eight artists-in-residence on stipends of $7500. The Board's contribution was matched by each institution. This is seen as a particularly successful program which not only provides stimulating and financially secure working situations for artists, but makes educational institutions, and the communities in which they are located, aware of the needs of artists. The most dynamic and fruitful situations were those where artists came from outside the local community. In two cases expatriate artists returned to Australia, Michael Johnson from New York to take up a position in Townsville, Queensland and William Delafield Cook, an Australian artist who had lived in Britain and Europe for a number of years, returned to Australia to become artist-in-residence at the University of Melbourne.

The Public Art Program drew an increased number of commissions for artists from government and private bodies. A potentially significant increase in artists' commissions came with the decision by the Overseas Property Bureau and the Treasury to allocate for the commissioning of works of art a percentage of the cost of building each Australian chancery overseas. This development had been sought by the Visual Arts Board from its inception as a means of assisting artists and promoting Australian art abroad.

Grants to public art galleries under the Australian Contemporary Art Acquisition Program drew further support for artists by encouraging the purchase of their works. Over three years, 159 grants totalling $360 157 have been given, and, combined with the funds provided by the art galleries, a total of $564 046 has now been paid to artists either directly or through their agents. The program has greatly expanded the contemporary Australian collection of galleries throughout the country.

The Board's scheme of assistance to art groups and societies which had provided $76 000 for such bodies was suspended for lack of funds in the latter part of 1975. A further $29 150 was distributed among visual arts applicants by the Community Arts Committee, including $10 000 to the Australian Flying Art School which conducts classes in art and craft in remote areas of Queensland. Although the Board granted a further $25 000 to the School its activities were considerably curtailed.

Support for a range of professional art institutions was sustained although often at a reduced level, and no additional grants for the appointment of professional staff to guide the activities in these institutions could be made. Increases in wages for staff employed under grants could be made only by imposing reductions in the activities sponsored by the grants. This situation presents a difficult future for these burgeoning institutions unless the Board's funds increase in pace with inflation.

The Miller Street Print Workshop in Sydney and a photography workshop in Hobart continue to operate with the limited assistance the Board can provide; but the Crossley Print Workshop, opened in Melbourne late in 1974 with a Board grant, closed when the building in which it was housed was due to be demolished. The print making equipment originally purchased with Board funds has now been lent to the Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology for a trial period of three years. A number of small institutions established with assistance from the Board continue to serve specific needs: the Experimental Art Foundation in Adelaide, the Institute of Modern Art in Brisbane and the Sculpture Centre in Sydney.

The showing of the exhibition Modern Masters: Manet to Matisse at the Art Gallery of New South Wales and the National Gallery of Victoria during 1975 to a total audience of about 350 000 fulfilled a Board aim of placing outstanding works of art before the public. The response indicated the potential audience for the visual arts in Australia. While it was not possible to show Modern Masters in more than two cities, lectures and films on the exhibition were arranged for all capital cities and grants provided to assist tertiary and senior secondary art students from other States to fly to Sydney or Melbourne to see the exhibition. Commonwealth Government indemnity for this exhibition of 113 works valued at US$70 000 000 — the most valuable exhibition to come to Australia — made the exhibition possible. Insurance premiums would have been prohibitive.

The unique combination of resources and skills which brought the exhibition about set a precedent for other large organisations to follow. Apart from providing a grant chiefly for the international and internal air freight, the Board took responsibility for arranging the movement of the exhibition, and its security through the Department of Administrative Services (Stores and Transport) and the Commonwealth Police. The exhibition was selected by William Lieberman, Director of Drawings at the Museum of Modern Art, New York, mounted under the auspices of the International Council of the Museum of Modern Art and financed by a grant of US$150 000 from the Alcoa Foundation. The Art Gallery of New South Wales and the National Gallery of Victoria contributed to the organising costs and made arrangements to handle the crowds.

The rapid growth of interest and involvement recently in a younger area of the visual arts — photography — has created enormous demands on the Board's budget. While not wishing to concentrate all its support for photography on one institution, the greater part of support for this medium has inevitably gone to the Australian Centre for Photography, Paddington, New South Wales. The Centre tours photographic exhibitions and assists photographers gain the public acceptance and support for their medium that is accorded painters and sculptors. Attendance at the Paddington gallery reflects a keen community interest.

The Board has encouraged the development of the Australian Gallery Directors' Council as a co-ordinating body for the organising and funding of touring exhibitions. Grants have been provided for the establishment of a secretariat and for exhibitions to tour State and regional galleries.

To stimulate the quality and range of international exhibitions coming to Australia, the Board engaged John Stringer for two years to mount exhibitions, to act as adviser to the Board and to assist in arranging foreign exhibitions of Australian art. Mr Stringer formerly worked in the National Gallery of Victoria and the Museum of Modern Art, New York. The first exhibition to be selected and assembled by him Illusions and Reality will be seen in Australia during 1977.

The Board, in conjunction with the Department of Foreign Affairs, has organised two exhibitions for touring abroad: The Australian Landscape 1802-1975 (selected by Daniel Thomas, Senior Curator of the Art Gallery of New South Wales) to China, and the 13th Bienal of São Paulo, Brazil, which subsequently toured five South American countries.

Assistance for the conservation of works of art was, in the face of national needs, limited to 'first-aid' measures, but the Board was given substantial assistance for the establishment of laboratories in Hobart and Launceston, for overseas study grants, and for a limited number of grants to enable conservation work to be carried out on valuable historical collections.

In March 1974 the Minister for Tourism and Recreation had announced a Capital Grants Program aimed at assisting with the provision of recreation facilities. Projects qualifying for assistance included building and extension programs for museums and art galleries. The Visual Arts Board received many requests for the construction or extension of art galleries but it was not possible for the Board's budget to embrace capital grants. The program of the Department of Tourism and Recreation (now discontinued) was therefore of considerable assistance to the arts and funds were provided to construct facilities in regional centres. One was to the Municipality of Burnie, Tasmania, for $112 500 for the art gallery component of the new civic centre. The gallery due to open during 1977 will serve a region with a population of about 100 000.

The Board also recommended a proposal, submitted by the Armidale (N.S.W.) City Council, for a gallery to house the important Howard Hinton Collection (now in the College of Advanced Education), the City collection, and privately donated collections. It also was able to complete two television series on artists co-produced with the Australian Broadcasting Commission. These films are available for purchase by educational institutions. Assistance was also provided to Art and Australia and Architecture Australia.

Lecture tours by the following artists and scholars were assisted by the Visual Arts

Board: William Lieberman, Director of Drawings, Museum of Modern Art, New York organised by the Visual Arts Board; Kenneth Noland, painter (Prahara Institute of Technology); Janet Fish, painter (Hogarth Gallery); Charlotte Moorman, performance artist/cellist, and Nam June Paik, video artist (John Kaldor); Phillip King, sculptor (British Council); Keith Coleburn, Chairman, Association of Art Institutions in England (Australian Association for Tertiary Art and Design Education), Garry Thomson, Conservator, National Gallery, London (Institute for the Conservation of Cultural Material).

Financial assistance was provided for the annual programs of three professional associations: the Art Association of Australia, a body of scholars, artists and critics concerned with writing on art in Australia; the Art Galleries Association of Australia, comprising professional staff of public art galleries and the Australian Association for Tertiary Art and Design Education, a body representing the interests of tertiary institutions with departments of art or design.
