SAME DIFFERENCE

" The Australian Disability Discrimination Act 1993 outlaws discrimination on the basis of disability. For schools this has all sorts of ramifications but the bottom line is no school can refuse to enrol a child on the basis of their disabilities "

Daily Telegraph Mirror 27/10/93

For some being different means being special. We all want to be able to express our individuality and at the same time to feel accepted and part of a group. In this play we look at what it means to be 'different'. Whether it means being from a different cultural background, being a woman, being Gay or having some kind of 'disability'. There are a surprising number of people who are different, in fact in one way or another we're all 'different'and we wouldn't have it any other way.
