Arts Project Australia
is pleased to invite you to the opening of

It takes more than 140

Curated by Dr Vincent Alessi, It takes more than 140 characters to write a novel explores the use of digital technologies and the photographic image in the creation of paintings, drawings and ceramic objects. It posits that artists who use technology as the basis of their art making are extending the experience of the "digital eye" so as to reclaim an analogue familiarity. It will present works by artists who create directly from digitally-mediated and photographic images, arguing that the physical act of painting, drawing and object making, and the presence of the artist's hand brings us closer to the physical world which we inhabit.

Exhibition to be opened by Dr Vincent Alessi, Senior Lecturer, Creative Arts, La Trobe University
